LLOYD [1164—according to ancient Welsh tradition, as follows: Cadifor ap Dyfnwal, Lord of Castell Hywel, &c., 9th in descent from Rhodri Mawr (i.e. Roderic the Great), King of all Wales, took by escalade in the above year the castle of Cardigan (Aberteifi) from the Earl of Clare (Roger de Clare, Earl of Gloucester) and the Flemings, for which his first cousin and father-in-law, the "great Lord Rhys," Prince of South Wales, whose daughter Catrin he had married, gave him considerable lands and a shield of arms as under. Cadifor was descended from Tudwal Gloff (a younger son of Rhodri Mawr), and would otherwise have borne for arms, "azure, a wolf rampant argent."—Ped. H. Coll.]—Sable, a spear-head imbrued between three scaling-ladders argent, on a chief gules, a castle of the second, with many quarterings, which, including repetitions, would number 153, of which the 71 chief quarterings are as shown in the accompanying illustration, and are duly proved and registered. Mantling sable and argent. Crest—On a wreath of the colours, a wolf rampant argent, the neck encircled by an annulet or, holding between the paws a broken spear proper, the head downwards piercing the sinister paw imbrued gules. Motto—"Ar Dduw y gyd." Standard of his livery colours of green and white, thereon his Badge, a wolf rampant argent,
